Case No. 2:12-cv-00416-LRH-GWF

ORDER

Motion for Offset - #108

This matter is before the Court on Defendant Dignity Health's Motion for Offset (#108) filed on March 5, 2014. Plaintiffs filed their Opposition to Defendant's Motion (#109) on March 21, 2014. Defendant filed its Reply (#111) on March 31, 2014. The Court conducted a hearing in this matter on April 21, 2014.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs allege that Defendant Dignity Health (hereinafter “Dignity”) terminated Plaintiff Regina Honey’s employment on June 22, 2010. Plaintiffs further allege that following her termination, Dignity failed to inform Ms. Honey that her and her family’s health insurance benefits ceased on June 30, 2010 and failed to notify or provide Plaintiff with the option to continue health insurance coverage (COBRA) after a qualifying event occurs, such as termination for something other than gross conduct as required by 29 U.S.C. §1161. Plaintiffs allege that pursuant to 29 U.S.C. §1132(c), the Court is vested with the discretion to assess a civil penalty against any party that fails to meet this statutory obligation in an amount not more than $110/day from the first day that notice is delinquent until valid notice is finally made. Each violation with respect to a single

1 participant shall be treated as a separate violation. Plaintiffs thus allege that the Court may impose 2 separate civil penalties on Dignity with respect to each member of the Honey family. See 3 Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment (#88), pg. 2.

4 The Plaintiffs also alleged claims for civil penalties under 29 U.S.C. § 1132(c) against 5 Defendants Conexis Benefits Administrators and Conexis, LLP ("Conexis") and Payflex
 6 Systems, USA, Inc. ("Payflex") based on their alleged failures to notify Plaintiffs of their COBRA 7 rights. Conexis and Payflex have now been dismissed from this action with prejudice by 8 stipulation between Plaintiffs and the Codefendants. See Orders (#102) and (#105). Conexis 9 informed Dignity that it entered into a confidential settlement agreement with the Plaintiffs, but has 10 refused to provide Dignity with a copy of the settlement agreement or disclose the amount of the 11 settlement payment, if any, made to the Plaintiffs. Payflex has refused to disclose to Dignity 12 whether it entered into a settlement agreement with the Plaintiffs or paid any money to Plaintiffs 13 pursuant to a settlement agreement. Plaintiffs state in their opposition that they have entered into 14 confidential settlement agreements with both Conexis or Payflex.

15 Dignity alleges that it is entitled to an offset for any payments made to the Plaintiffs by 16 Defendants Conexis or Payflex, and therefore seeks an order requiring Plaintiffs to produce the 17 settlement agreements and/or disclose the amounts paid to Plaintiffs by Conexis or Payflex in 18 exchange for the dismissal of the claims against them. Plaintiffs argue that Dignity is not entitled 19 to an offset for any payments made to them by Conexis or Payflex, and therefore the settlement 20 payments made by Defendants are irrelevant and the Court should not order production of 21 settlement agreements or disclosure of the settlement amounts.

22 DISCUSSION

23 Defendant Dignity has the initial burden to show that the settlement agreements and/or the 24 amounts of the settlements between Plaintiffs and Conexis and Payflex are relevant to its defenses
 25 to Plaintiffs' claim and therefore discoverable. See Krause v. Nevada Mut. Ins. Co., 2014 WL 26 496636, *4 (D.Nev. 2014) ("The party seeking to compel discovery has the initial burden of 27 establishing that a request satisfies the relevancy requirements of Rule 26(b)(2).") Relevancy under 28 Rule 26(b) is construed broadly. Id., citing Oppenheimer Fund, Inc. v. Sanders, 437 U.S. 340

1 (1978).<sup>1</sup>

2 Dignity argues that the payments received by Plaintiffs from the Codefendants are relevant 3 because civil penalties or statutory damages awarded under 29 U.S.C. §1132(c)(1)(A) are, at least 4 in part, intended to compensate the Plaintiffs for the injuries or harm they have suffered, and 5 Plaintiffs should not recover damages greater than what is needed to fully compensate them.
 6 Plaintiffs argue, however, that the remedy provided by §1132(c)(1)(A) is a penalty which intended 7 to punish a defendant and deter it from engaging in future violations. The amount of civil penalties 8 paid by one defendant by way of judgment or settlement is therefore irrelevant to the determination 9 of the civil penalties that should be imposed on a codefendant.

10 In support of their position, Plaintiffs rely on the Eighth Circuit's decision in Starr v. Metro 11 Systems, Inc., 461 F.3d 1036, 1040 (8th Cir. 2006) which states as follows:

12 Under 29 U.S.C. §1132(c)(1)(A), an ERISA plan administrator "may 13 in the court's discretion be personally liable" up to $100 per day from 14 the date of his or her failure to comply with the notification 15 requirements of 29 U.S.C. §1166(a)(4). The purpose of this statutory 16 penalty is to provide plan administrators with an incentive to comply 17 with the requirements of ERISA, Kerr v. Charles F. Vatterott & Co., 18 184 F.3d 938, 948 (8th Cir. 1999), and to punish noncompliance, 19 Chesnut v. Montgomery, 307 F.3d 698, 704 (8th Cir. 2002). In 20 exercising its discretion to impose statutory damages, a court primarily should consider "the prejudice to the plaintiff and the nature of the plan administrator's conduct." Kerr, 184 F.3d at 948.
 Although relevant, a defendant's good faith and the absence of harm do not preclude the imposition of the § 1132(c)(1)(A) penalty.
Chesnut, 307 F.3d at 703. We review the decision to deny statutory damages for an abuse of discretion. Wilson v. Moog Auto., Inc.
Pension Plan & Trust, 193 F.3d 1004, 1010 (8th Cir. 1999).

21 Plaintiffs also cite Van Hoove v. Mid-America Bldg. Maintenance, Inc., 841 F.Supp. 1523, 22 1537 (D.Kan. 1993) in which the court rejected the defendant's argument that a $10,000 settlement 23 that plaintiff received from a codefendant should offset the defendant's liability under 24 §1132(c)(1)(A). The court stated: "Had Corroon and Black, the plan administrator, remained in 25 <sup>1</sup> Discovery closed in this case months ago. Arguably, after Plaintiffs refused to informally 26 produce the settlement agreements, Dignity should have moved to reopen discovery so that it could serve a 27 request for production of the settlement agreements on Plaintiffs. The Court would have granted such a 28 motion because the settlement agreements were only recently entered into between Plaintiffs and the Codefendants. Under the circumstances and in the interest of expeditious resolution of this dispute, the Court will overlook the procedural issues raised by Plaintiffs.

1 the case, the court would have had the discretion to penalize Corroon and Black up to $100 per day
2 for its statutory violations. It would be inappropriate to offset plaintiff's damages with a settlement 3 amount that more closely represents a penalty than compensation for damages." Id.

4 The Ninth Circuit's interpretation of the purpose of §1132(c)(1)(A), however, differs from 5 that of the Eighth Circuit and the district court in Van Hoove. In Stone v. The Travelers
6 Corporation, 58 F.3d 434, 437-39 (9th Cir. 1995), the court was required to determine what statute
7 of limitation governs claims under 29 U.S.C. §1132(c)(1)(A). Because §1132(c) does not provide 8 its own statute of limitations, the court was required to look to the most analogous state statute of 9 limitations. The district court applied California's one year statute of limitations for an action upon 10 a statute for a penalty or forfeiture. The Ninth Circuit concluded, however, that the three year
11 California statute of limitations for an action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty 12 or forfeiture should apply. In so holding, the court relied on Rivera v. Anaya, 726 F.2d 564 (9th 13 Cir. 1984) which held that the statutory damages remedy under the Federal Farm Labor Contractor 14 Registration Act was not a penalty because the statute was intended to compensate plaintiffs in a 15 situation where ““the damages may be obscure and difficult to prove.”” Stone, 58 F.3d at 438, 16 quoting Rivera, 726 F.2d at 567. The fact that Congress provided for either actual or statutory 17 damages did not detract from the fact that the provision for damages contemplated compensation, 18 and not a penalty or punishment by the government. Stone further noted that the wrong addressed 19 by §1132(c)(1)(A) is substantially more private than public. The wrong is the failure of the 20 employer or the administrator to provide the plan beneficiary with the requested information. The 21 injury to the plaintiff is that he lacks information concerning “his own pension or severance rights.”
22 Stone, 58 F.3d at 438. The court also relied on the fact that the remedy was sought by and payable 23 to the plaintiff for his injury, and was not sought by the government to compensate for a public 24 injury. The court therefore concluded that “recovery of up to $100 per day provided to a participant 25 or beneficiary by ERISA §1132(c) is not a ‘penalty or forfeiture,’ but is instead a remedy sought by 26 an individual as compensation to address a private wrong.” Stone, 58 F.3d at 439.

27 In Hamilton v. Sears Roebuck and Company, 2008 WL 1901269 (D.Nev. 2008), the 28 plaintiff asserted a claim under 29 U.S.C. §1132(c)(1)(A) based on the defendant's failure to provide COBRA notification. The district court found that the employer and the plan administrator failed to provide the notice as a result of a computer error. Due to this same error, the plaintiff continued to receive health insurance coverage under her former employer's health insurance plan. The court held that an award of statutory damages of $100 a day was too severe because the defendant's mistake was inadvertent. The court stated, however, that statutory damages could be awarded if plaintiff could show that she suffered some actual injury or damage. The Ninth Circuit affirmed this decision in an unpublished memorandum, Hamilton v. Sears Roebuck and Company, 357 Fed.Appx. 25, 2009 WL 4884319 (C.A. 9 (Nev.)). In holding that the district court did not abuse its discretion in declining to award statutory damages, the court stated:

The court's order left open the possibility Hamilton could have recovered had she been able to show her actual damages. This comports with §1132(c)(1)(A)'s primary purpose, to compensate victims for damages due to lack of notification, see Stone v. Travelers Corp., 58 F.3d 434, 438-39 (9th Cir. 1995), and Hamilton does not allege any benefit to TGI, thus removing the need for a recovery for a deterrence purpose.

Given the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of §1132(c)(1)(A), the settlement payments that Plaintiffs received from Conexis or Payflex are relevant to the Court's determination of the statutory damages that should be awarded on Plaintiff's remaining §1132(c)(1)(A) claim against Defendant Dignity. This does not mean that Dignity is entitled to a complete offset for the amounts Plaintiffs received in settlement from the other defendants. Stone does not rule out that punishment and deterrence are also legitimate purposes of an award under §1132(c)(1)(A). Depending on the facts, the Court may decide that an award of statutory damages against Dignity is appropriate, notwithstanding that the amount of the award, combined with the payments made by the Codefendants, exceeds the amount necessary to fully compensate Plaintiffs for their injuries.

Because the settlement payments that Plaintiffs have received from the Codefendants are relevant to the assessment of statutory damages against Dignity, the Court must now decide whether the interests of Plaintiffs, Conexis or Payflex in the confidentiality of their settlements outweigh Dignity's interest in obtaining the information regarding the settlement amounts. In Kalinauskas v. Wong, 151 F.R.D. 363, 365 (D.Nev. 1993), the court stated that the public interest

1 favors judicial policies which promote the completion of litigation, the finality of prior suits and the 2 secrecy of settlements when desired by the settling parties. The court further stated:

3 Confidential settlements benefit society and the parties involved by 4 resolving disputes relatively quickly with slight judicial intervention, 5 and presumably result in greater satisfaction to the parties. Sound 6 judicial policy fosters and protects this form of alternative dispute 7 resolution. See, e.g. Fed.R.Evid. 408 which protects compromises 8 and offers to compromise by rendering them inadmissible to prove 9 liability. The secrecy of a settlement agreement and the contractual 10 rights of the parties thereunder deserve court protection. Flynn v.
Portland Gen. Elec. Corp., 1989 WL 112802, 58 U.S.L.W. 2243, 50 Fair. Empl. Prac. Cas. (BNA) 1497 (D.Or. 1989) (party seeking discovery about previously settled case must identify specific information sought and why such information cannot be obtained another way; “the strong public policy favoring settlement of disputed claims dictates that confidentiality agreements regarding such settlements not be lightly abrogated”).

11 Id., 151 F.R.D. at 365.

12 Kalinauskas also noted, however, that contracts containing explicit guarantees of 13 confidentiality are not binding on persons who do not sign them and other interests or concerns 14 may outweigh the parties’ interest in confidentiality. Id., 151 F.R.D. at 366-367.

15 Confidential settlement agreements are not entitled to presumptive protection against 16 disclosure to third persons. In Philips v. General Motors Corp., 307 F.3d 1206, 1212 (9th Cir.
 17 2002), the court, citing Hasbrouck v. BankAmerica Housing Serv., 187 F.R.D. 453 455 (N.D.N.Y.
 18 1999) and Kalinauskas v. Wong, supra, stated that district courts have the authority under 19 Fed.R.Civ. Pro. 26(c) to grant protective orders preventing the disclosure of confidential settlement 20 agreements to third persons or parties. The party seeking a protective order has the burden of 21 demonstrating good cause for its issuance. Phillips, 307 F.3d at 1210. “For good cause to exist, 22 the party seeking protection bears the burden of showing specific prejudice or harm will result if no 23 protective order is granted. . . . If a court finds particularized harm will result from disclosure of 24 information to the public, then it balances the public and private interests to decide whether a 25 protective order is necessary.” Id. In Joe Hand Promotions, Inc. v. Rangee, 2013 WL 685001,*4 26 (E.D.Cal. 2013), the plaintiff requested that the court enter a protective order allowing plaintiff to 27 file a confidential settlement agreement under seal, which it alleged had been breached by the 28 defendant. After discussing the decisions in Phillips, Hasbrouck and Kalinauskas, the court held

1 that plaintiff failed to show good cause for the issuance of a protective order because it did not 2 show how specific prejudice or harm would result if no protective order was issued.

3 Plaintiffs have opposed Dignity's motion chiefly on the grounds that the settlements
4 between them and Conexis and Payflex are irrelevant. Plaintiffs and Conexis, whose counsel 5 appeared at the hearing, otherwise generally rely on the fact that they have agreed to make their 6 settlement agreements confidential. Plaintiffs and Codefendants, however, have not made any 7 showing that they will suffer specific harm or injury if the settlement agreements are disclosed to 8 Dignity. The Court therefore finds that Plaintiffs have not shown good cause to prevent the 9 production of the settlement agreements to Dignity for use in support of its defense to Plaintiffs'
10 claim.<sup>2</sup>

11 CONCLUSION

12 The payments received by Plaintiffs pursuant to their settlements with Codefendants 13 Conexis and Payflex may appropriately be considered by the District Court in determining the 14 amount of the statutory damages, if any, that should be awarded against Defendant Dignity under 15 29 U.S.C. §1132(c)(1)(A). The undersigned makes no finding, however, as to the amount of any 16 offset or reduction in the award of statutory damages that should be made based on the 17 compensation already received by Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs and the Codefendants have not 18 demonstrated that they will suffer any specific harm or injury if the settlement agreements are 19 produced to Defendant Dignity. Accordingly,

20 IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendant Dignity Health's Motion for Offset (#108) is 21 granted to the extent that Plaintiffs shall provide Defendant Dignity's counsel with copies of the
